The Mosquitoes of the Josquin.

(An Attack on the Pests, not the Places.) The mosquitoes of the Joaquin, -There's just no use o' talkin'-Are not the sort for balkin', By any common ways. So sure as you go among 'em, -I wish that Kearney'd hung 'em-They'll bleed you nights and days!

The mosquitoes of the Joaquin. With loud songs and with bills keen Can soon make a fat man lean. By tricks queer and ways dark. Your sleep is broke in the middle,

When they begin to fiddle. They "climb the trees and bark." Your mosquito-bars are nowhar, Somehow the 'skeeter'll be thar. It's a fact, sir, on the squar! He's bound to get inside. Once I had a friend that tried it, And know he never lied it:

He says they "plugged" his hide. There, at Grayson and Hill's Ferry. These pests are victous very, It's frightful bow they werry A fellow out of sleep. You may woo Morpheus with toddy,

No use! they'll take your body; Pray well your soul to keep. Our friend had real lively times,

While he fought, and heard their chimes Lay, and furned, and planned these rhymes Thinking of the Joaquin. When he arose, soon after dawn, Hundreds there, though scores were gone -Just no use o' talkin'!

He tried his "level best" to sleep, Nor "slept a wink," till dawn did peep; While scores of pests their vigils keep, He fought, and thought, and tossed on. Was e'er the like found anywhere, For sounds and bites, or sounds by pair? -Unless it be "in Boston?"

He thought of songs celestial, "Jublice," and "Festival." This, he says, was BEST-i-al, (beet of ali?) This music of the wings. Bables' cries, when they are toothing? Thunder-storms? Oh! they're soothing! But this was not, "by jings!"

He recalls the Anvil Chorus; He thinks of things that bore us, Bad as an ox can gore us, -Though on a smaller scale: And while many a siren sings, Dreams the world's just full of things. That sting with bill or tail!

Settlers, they say, never mind it, Though rough all strangers find it, For they all get badly bit! I call such things a curse. You think not? Well, you just try 'em! Talk of "perdidi diem!"

Perdidi noctem's worsel Ye who live without musketeers, And such devourin' creeters, Sing balleluiah meters. For blessings ye enjoy! Don't stay long on Josquin river You'll have a healthy liver.

And sleep without alloy.
